

Dan Roth is an internationally recognized and awarded recruiter and professional speaker. Dan Began speaking during his time at Monmouth University where he got his degree in Journalism. During his time at Monmouth, Dan spoke about and mentored those with ADHD while advocating for Women's and LGBTQIA rights.

After graduating, Dan continued to work in media, starting as a Managing Editor in print while eventually making his way to TV and Radio. In 2012, Dan moved to San Diego California where he decided to pivot. He started in telecommunications before moving to healthcare and finally Project Management.

When the pandemic hit, Dan found himself out of a job, with newborn twin daughters and a wife to take care of. Unhappy and nearly out of options, Dan turned to social media to stand out to employers. The major difference was he decided to step out of the shadows and do things his way.

Dan started speaking openly about being neurodiverse while creating a platform on LinkedIn that allowed job seekers to find bias-free resources and opportunities. In a matter of months, Dan was reaching 200,000 people per week. Within 6 months he had pivoted again, this time to a recruiter and professional speaker. By the 9-month mark, Dan got hired by Amazon and within a year Dan had put job seekers in front of over 3 million eyes, helped hundreds get jobs, had done 60+ speaking engagements including two international keynotes in Nigeria and expanded his platform to include the fastest growing group on LinkedIn with over 8,000 people.

Today, Dan has been featured in the New York Times, MSNBC, The Wall Street Journal, Ignite TV, and LinkedIn News and was named one of the Top Job Search Experts in the World to Follow by Jobscan.
